

Viruses, fact or fantasy?

05.26.2022

Have you heard that pathogenic and contagious viruses do not exist at all?
Nonsense, have you gone nuts?

For 150 years people thought diseases are caused by poison.
And poison in Latin is virus. This is the origin of the virus theory.
So it is possible that they exist!

- 1) tiny pieces of DNA are, for no obvious reason, called viruses. They are neither pathogenic nor contagious. Most of these pieces cannot duplicate themselves. These pieces of DNA are the building blocks of life. You find them in your genome and in your debris.
- 2) Very long sequences of DNA, designed in the computer, have been given names like corona virus, ebola virus, aids virus etc. You will not find them in nature.
So people are not killed by corona, ebola, aids and so on?

These diseases do exist, and to each of them a “virus” has been made by the computer.
And what would that be good for?

When you invent an enemy, e.g. a virus you can sell a vaccine to defeat the enemy.
So those vaccins are not effective?

According to the immune theory, vaccines teach our immune system, or more precisely our T-memory cells, to recognize a “virus”. Does the “real virus” appear these T-memory cells can react very quickly.
Yes that is what I learned as well. And what would be wrong about that?

These T-memory cells give you long-term immunity, according to the theory. With measles up to 50 years. But what turns out, these T-memory cells live less than 50 days! So you are never longer immune than 50 days. That means all vaccines are useless.
I don't believe a word. You only get the measles once, that means you have a long-term immune system.

Yes that is correct, but not based on T-memory cells, as they live less than 50 days.
Probably genes are put on or off, so that we do not get more than once the measles.
When that is right, scientists would have found out how to put these genes on or off.

That is not a good revenue model, then people will get healthy and you will lose them as customer.

It sounds very weird. This means the whole world is being cheated. Where can I read more please?
